

Advanced Placement United States History Frequently Asked Questions

What is AP US History?

This is a college level history course that explores the history of the American nation from pre-colonial times through the present.

Why should I take AP US History?

Students who understand and are willing to accept that academic classes will become increasingly rigorous through high school and college often take AP classes to prepare themselves for these challenges. AP classes are weighted more than other classes and they look great on college applications if you're willing to put in the necessary work. The AP Exam, taken at the end of the year, offers the opportunity to earn college credit (often worth thousands of dollars in tuition) while still in high school.

How much and what type of work will I be doing?

A 90-minute class typically includes discussion of a current event for about 15 minutes and notes and lecture about a specific historical topic for about 30 minutes. The remainder of the class is usually spent doing an activity such as class debate, group work or reading discussions.

You should expect to work one-to-two hours each night. Homework typically consists of a reading assignment and a written activity, such as a first-person journal entry or writing sentences that include vocabulary words.

Here is an example of a homework assignment:

Read pages 500-520 in Out of Many; Write a journal entry of 250 words in which you assume the personality of a settler heading west on a Conestoga Wagon. Explain the challenges and successes you encounter along the way.

What are tests and quizzes like?

You'll have reading quizzes and tests at the end of each unit. The test typically includes multiple choice, matching and an essay question. In mid-May, each student will take the AP Exam.

What is the AP Exam?

The AP Exam is the end-of-course test for AP US History. It is administered by the College Board. There are three parts on the AP US History exam: an 80-question multiple choice section, a document based question answered in essay format, and two standard essay questions. Students have about three hours to take the exams. Scores range from 1 to 5 and students who get a 3, 4, or 5 stand a good chance of receiving college credit for their score.

Who can I talk to if I need more information?

It's likely that some of your friends and acquaintances have taken an AP class before, and talking with them might give you an idea of what's in store. The best way would probably be to speak with Ms. McKeithan. You can email her at lydia.mckeithan@nn.k12.va.us.

You can also visit the College Board's AP US History website here: <https://apstudent.collegeboard.org/apcourse/ap-united-states-history>.

Information on AP courses was provided by The College Board. See AP Courses for more information.